

Medigard ups hospital testing in US

| November 13th, 2009

GOLD Coast medical product developer Medigard is poised to step up hospital evaluations of its blood collection device in the US.

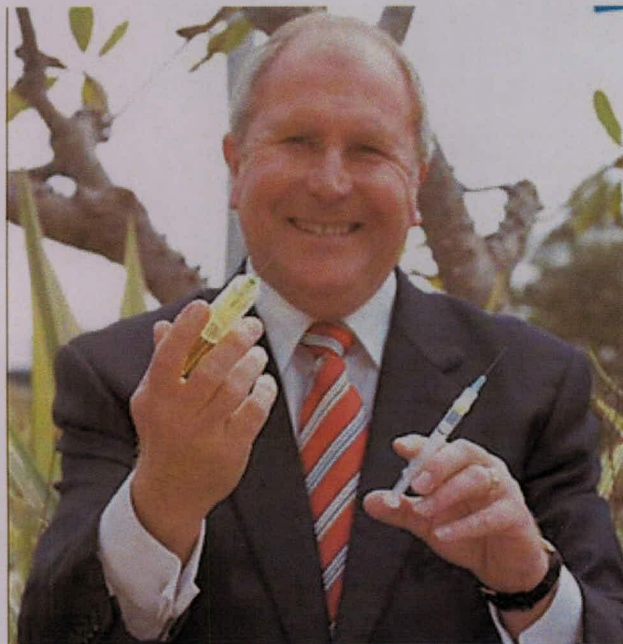

The move comes after a successful start to testing by Quest Diagnostics.

"Quest Diagnostics offers the most extensive clinical testing network in the US, operating laboratories in most senior metropolitan areas," said Medigard chief executive Peter Emery.

He said Quest, which undertakes testing on more than 500,000 patients a day, also had a presence in Mexico, the UK and India.

Following its preliminary testing program in the US, Mr Emery said Quest was now ready to begin a hospital-wide evaluation of Medigard's device.

Medigard's shares closed steady at 10c yesterday.
